Editorial

Our mission is to publish the Mongolian Geoscientist journal continuously. However, the aftermath of the pandemic appears to have long-term implications for research. Looking at the quality of research articles submitted in the journal volume, negative aspects such as limited laboratory research activities and limited international cooperation have been observed. Because of this, we regret that 50% of the articles we received for the new issue were rejected due to insufficient analysis results. We hope that the field and laboratory research activities of geoscientists will continue indefinitely in the coming years, and look forward to having many new scientific results.

On the other hand, I am glad that the journal managed to update the online registration system during this period. I would like to thank the team of INASP and MongoliaJOL for supporting this activity. As well as, we happy that starting from this issue of the MGS, switching to the process of ONLINE FIRST publishing for the accepted article stamp.
